Travelling in the '70s (1 x 60mins)

Writer- Producer- Director. Self shooter (sequences)

New York baby boomer Dean Cycon re-experiences the modes of travel that encapsulated the iconic 1970s – the decade when the USA was embroiled in a horrific war in South East Asia, battling sexual equality while the muscle motorcar was thirsting for oil. We delve into the fashions and the technological fads that were never going to stay the test of time. Along the way, Dean flies, cigarette in mouth, on the first jumbo jet, crosses Jack Kerouac's America on a Greyhound bus, hitches a ride with a CB-obsessed trucker, re-enacts 'Easy Rider' on a Harley Davidson motorbike, goes inter-railing in Europe on a student travel pass and joins some Hippies on their magic bus trip to self-discovery. The show intercuts Dean's peregrinations and nostalgic re-enactments with a string of 1970s archive film footage.

Presenter Megan McCormick chronicles the American industrial revolution in steel, oil and transport by visiting the sites where their fires were first lit. Through interviews and re-enactments, she tells the story of the rise and fall of the Midwest as the beating heart of U.S. manufacturing. Conrad Vanderbilt, Andrew Carnegie, John D. Rockefeller and Henry Ford are the chief personages of her tale but this epic two hour travel film also points at modern rebirth in cities like Detroit, where small tech businesses and continuing innovation is planting new seeds of growth.
